

THE IEF SEASONS

The Incredible Edible Farm is a seasonal farm with fluctuating levels of activity depending on the season. Below, you will find a breakdown of our farm's rhythm and specific volunteer needs for each season.
Thank you for your continued support!

Winter

Known as the "Farmer's Favorite Season," the farm activity slows. Our focus is placed on allowing plants to grow and maintaining soil health. Due to these factors, our need for volunteers will be less.

Spring

The sun becomes warm again as it shines without the cover of the winter fog. We will be preparing for the summer. Expect tasks such as planting seeds and seedlings as well as harvesting.

Autumn

The warm weather becomes fleeting in this short season and the main harvesting comes to a close. We shift our focus to replanting winter crops and maintenance, such as mulching and irrigation.

Summer

Abundant sunlight is the hallmark of this season. The plants thrive on these unlimited resources and will be at the peak of their growth. We will need HARVESTERS! Bring everyone you know to come help us!

The frenzy of summer is tiring for farmers and soil alike. The earth needs the leisurely winter to regenerate. If it is worked too frequently, it will lose its ability to produce healthful food. The dry plants on the left will be cut into the soil and, in turn, gives its nutrients to the soil and future crops on the right.
